LUXURY HANDMADE KITCHEN SINKS

EVERY HANDMADE SINK IS A MASTERPIECE OF TRADITIONAL MANUFACTURING, CREATED BY OUR VERY OWN SKILLED ARTISANS.

HANDMADE IN ENGLAND

OUR STORY

It was right here in Lancashire that the very first traditional fireclay sinks were made, back in the late 1800s. Centuries later, here at the Whitebirk Sink Company we're proud to be the only British-owned company continuing this fine tradition.

Each original sink takes time to make, and our master craftsmen use time-honoured methods that have remained unchanged over generations. The nature of our handmade process creates tiny but distinctive variations between each sink, making every one of them truly unique.

WE TAKE PRIDE USING TIME-HONOURED,
TRADITIONAL METHODS IN OUR MANUFACTURING PROCESS.

HANDMADE IN ENGLAND

OUR PROCESS

MODELLING AND MOULDING

Each sink design is hand modelled in plaster, formed slightly oversize to allow for the natural clay shrinkage that occurs through the production process. From here, we make the reverse plaster mould, which will be dried for up to two weeks in dedicated temperature-controlled rooms. This ensures optimum production performance and dimensional consistency.

CLAY CASTING

We use virgin local clays, giving us an industry-leading level of control over dimensional accuracy and consistency. All materials are tested to (and exceed) British, European and North American standards. Our clay is cast into the preconditioned moulds, tightly packed to a controlled thickness and left to start the drying process. This method has been used for centuries and is tried and tested to offer the best performance specifications and strength.

Between twenty-four and forty-eight hours later, the sink is then 'turned out' from the mould to continue the drying process.

HAND FINISHING AND DRYING

After the sink has been turned out of the mould, we meticulously hand finish the surfaces with a variety of wooden and metal tools, along with leathers, all to give the required finish. The sinks are allowed to dry naturally at room temperature for a few days. Then, they're moved into our automated, humidity controlled drying rooms, to fully remove any residual moisture.

GLAZE APPLICATION

The glazing is done in two stages. First, the engobe (a type of undercoat) is applied, then they are given the final coat of glaze. In the case of our mottled finish, complex glazes are required to achieve this beautiful effect. This process takes a three coat application. Now, they're ready for the kiln.

FIRING

The sinks are set on the kiln for a firing process that will take them over 36 hours, reaching temperatures of more than 1180 degrees Celsius. We obtain the beautiful finish by firing at varying temperatures during this time, before the sinks are allowed to cool naturally in the kiln.

INSPECTION

Our experienced craftsmen personally inspect every sink that we produce, attesting to its quality, integrity and durability. This allows us to conform to the standards set out by BS 1206 1974. The nature of the handmade process also means that tiny variations can occur between each sink. This means when you buy a sink from us, you'll be buying one that is - in its own way - beautifully unique.

SINKS ARE CAREFULLY CHOSEN TO

OUR COLLECTIONS

Every authentic sink in our Collections takes time to create, and the result is a true masterpiece of traditional manufacturing. They are made by our very own talented craftsmen, who use long-established techniques (passed down through generations of local artisans) to produce iconic heritage and contemporary designs.

Classic Belfast sinks have been around since the 1700s. Two main qualities have ensured they stay fashionable and practical for over 300 years - their aesthetic appeal and their enduring robustness. As our skilled craftsmen have been mastering the handmade process for over 50 years, an opportunity arose for us to explore new possibilities. Technical raw materials and knowledge have provided innovation and assisted in the development of unique colours, textures and applications.

OUR CRAFTSMEN HOLD A PARTICULARLY DEEP
ROOTED PASSION FOR THEIR CRAFT. FOR MANY OF THEM, IT'S A FAMILY TRADITION.

HANDMADE IN ENGLAND

OUR CRAFTSMEN

We employ a skilled team of local craftspeople and master artisans here at our Blackburn base, honouring Lancashire's esteemed manufacturing heritage by using traditional materials and long-established techniques.

Motivated by a tireless passion for their craft, these gifted men and women use their rare talents to keep these traditional methods alive, making each and every fireclay sink a marvel of authentic, specialist manufacturing.

Today, we have the enviable distinction of being the only British-owned company to be making handmade fireclay Belfast sinks. We're determined to stay worthy of this legacy by handcrafting high quality products that embody flawless aesthetics, solid durability and endless practicality, ensuring they provide our customers with a lifetime of service.
